This is very different from what happens during group time, when we tend to read books. Researchers Susan Neuman and Kathleen Roskos found that classrooms rich in functional print inspired more literacy-focused dramatic play, which resulted in children with greater literacy competencies. Dramatic play allows children to recognize that different tasks require different texts. By regularly and systematically incorporating literacy props into dramatic play, you help children

Building on Piaget, Roskos and Christie (2004) believe that as children engage in play, they are using their memories to assist to connect their play to pre-literacy skills such as naming and symbolic thought. Children recall their past play experiences and create new meanings each time they play. (as cited in Tsao, 2008, p.518).

Preschool teachers develop literacy by continually exposing children to oral and written language, and by building on prior knowledge and language experiences. Pictures, play, and the printed word combine with oral language to help your child understand the symbolic representation that underlies reading and writing.

This is one of my favorite preschool literacy activities. Get 4-5 pieces of paper. Draw some basic fish, write a letter on each fish. Cut out. Make a “ pond ” with a tray, blanket, or just use the floor. Pop the fish face down in the pond. Invite your child to go fishing. As they get a fish, ask your child to tell you what they got. ”
