First example, "look at those whom are walking down the street". The people walking down the street are the object of the preposition (at whom); the person being spoken to is the subject because they are the ones doing the action (looking). Try this. Eg. Those who are walking down the street have their phones in their hands.

Those Who Work, Those Who Don't explores the moral dimensions of rural poverty in the pseudonymous "Golden Valley", a rural California town plunged into hardship in the wake of the 1990 spotted-owl decision, which undermined the community's precarious relationship with the timber industry by declaring Golden Valley's forests the protected habitat of an endangered species.

Those Who Work, Those Who Don't: Poverty, Morality, and ...

Compellingly written, shot through with honesty and empathy, Those Who Work, Those Who Don't is a rare firsthand account that studies the rural poor. As incomes erode and the American dream becomes more and more inaccessible, Sherman reveals that moral values and practices become a way for the poor to gain status and maintain a sense of dignity in the face of economic ruin.
